VANCOUVER COMEDY SERIES GUNNING FOR $500K IN CBC CHALLENGE

The untimely death of their billionaire father was supposed to be the best thing that ever happened to Dickie and Freeman Bannister. But when a clause in their father's will stipulates that they must earn a million dollars on their own before they can gain access to the family fortune, these lazy and spoiled brothers have to do something they've never done before: put in an effort.

Vancouver-based Heir Heads currently stands as one of the most popular projects in CBC's Comedy Coup development accelerator program. Pitting teams from all across Canada against one another, CBC hopes to find fresh talent that can stand the heat of gruelling weekly challenges. One deserving team will earn their big break to the tune of $500K to produce a half-hour comedy special for the network.

Through the competition, Heir Heads has received consistent praise from programmers, fellow competitors, and fans who themselves dictate the project's success through social media voting.

We hope to garner attention for our project and for the competition itself, as for the first time, Canadians have the opportunity to decide what they want to see on TV.

Heir Heads features rising stars in the Vancouver comedy community. Fresh off his best actor win in the Leo Awards for his role in Anxious Oswald Greene, Ryan Beil continues to delight audiences nationally in his many TV appearances and with his award-winning comedy troupe The Sunday Service. Starring opposite of Ryan, is newcomer

Bruce Novakowski whose starring role in the film After Film School is generating buzz in advance of its world premiere at this year's Whistler Film Festival.
