BIKE COPS

LOW SPEED HIGH STAKES

Genre: Comedy
Marshall Jefferies, Erin Reid
Created By: Ted Jefferies & Erin Reid
Produced By: Comedy Coup

Logline

The Toronto Police Bike Patrol is a misfit squad of eccentric yet competent-enough officers who are used to dealing with the city's less glorious crimes. On any given day these cops could be in high-speed chases with unicycles, performing RIDE checks after Bryan Adams concerts, or providing security for Hollywood movie shoots.

Synopsis

Constable Eric Spooner is perfectly happy with being stationed in the Toronto Police Bike Patrol. When he's not joking with the Sergeant, he's cruising the streets and working on his sweet thigh tan.

That is until the mayor's bike gets stolen hours before her campaign to promote new bike lanes in the city. To find her bike and save the campaign's image, the TPBP is put on the case. To make sure they don't mess it up, Major Crimes sends Detective Lauren Bell, Spooner's arch-nemesis, to aid in the investigation.

When the mayor realizes Spooner and Bell can be the public faces of her new campaign, she requests a none Patrol Investigation Unit be formed, headed by none other than Constable Spooner and Detective Bell.

Now, Spooner and Bell must try to form a functioning unit out of the Bike Patrol, with the mayor watching their every move. Soon, the TPBP will be in over their helmets as they begin dealing with the city's politics, corruption, and actual crimes.

WITNESS REPORTS

I think the Bike Cop idea has great potential for a sustained show. The writing and the acting are funny.

-Brian B.

The brand is looking cool. Bike cops have always been a well of good comedy. Canadians can relate. Funny stuff!

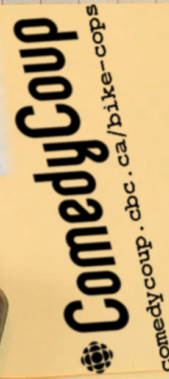

-Chris C.

I love the concept of a bike police force. I'm glad to see such a varied cast, not just a bunch of white dudes doing stuff.

-Wendel S.

I can imagine this to be a Canadian Classic, even as a television series running for years.

-Vik M.
